

SOMETHING IN YOUR LAUGH

By Barbara Pavlik – 18 May 2007

A smile, a wink, a little lie,
Something in your laugh that makes me cry.
A kiss, a word, a wistful sigh,
The tip of my tongue in the corner of your eye.

When all the world is going round,
It's you that keeps me on the ground.
Once I was free, but now I'm bound.
I want to know what I have found.

A smile, a wink, a little lie,
Something in your eyes that makes me blind.

My journey's brought me here to you.
How will we know what we're to do?
Hopes for the future, life is a dream.
Something inside me lets out a scream.

A smile, a wink, a little lie,
Something in your search that makes me hide.

A splash of sun, a twinkling star,
Makes me dream of lands afar.
The smell of grass and unmet friends,
Make me want to soar again.

A smile, a wink, a little lie,
Something in your thirst that makes me dry.

I count to ten, I try to stay,
No use... my heart is far away.
Shattered dreams are nothing new.
Believe in them, and you're the fool.

A smile, a wink, a little lie,
Something in my cruelty makes you kind.

I've been here and you've been there.
Why is it that we're unaware?
This path that leads me back to you,
A different face, we start anew.

A smile, a wink, a little lie,
Something in your song that drives me wild.

Different stories, different times,
Different lips that tell sweet lies.
If we could ever break the chain,
Tell me then, what would we gain?

A smile, a wink, a little lie,
Something in your laugh that makes me cry.
A kiss, a word, a whistful sigh,
The tip of my tongue in the corner of your eye.
A quivering lip, a silent tear,
Signals that the end is drawing near.

A smile, a wink, a little lie,
Something in your laugh that makes me cry,
Something in your laugh that makes me cry.